This story was originally published in Day One, a weekly literary journal dedicated to short fiction and poetry from emerging writers.

A biker rides along beside a limousine for kilometers on end, trying to ascertain whether the woman sticking out of the sunroof is his former girlfriend. And even if she were, she also wouldn't be, and, in a certain sense, they both know it. A woman comes back to her hometown for her father's funeral after years away, which was no sacrifice. The sacrifice was going back at all; the funeral itself was a relief. The characters of these six stories find themselves wrangling with loneliness, jealousy, death, sex, and a contemporary world that changes them and is changed by them. Wanderers, they want to settle; enigmatic, they try to decipher themselves. Some reappear in other stories, sometimes as protagonists, other times in more tangential, secondary roles, weaving a web of encounters and near misses that is always permeated by time. The internal time of each character pits itself against the real time of the world outside, a time so implacable it makes new people of them, a transformation that can take years or a split second. As a counterweight to this raw time, the author spins her plots with great delicateness.
